

Contributing to the Radcliffe Oral History Project had several effects on me – I enjoyed sharing what I could remember off the top of my head and I was prompted to dig deeper to articulate my personal view of Radcliffe’s limitations in educating women. I was also unsettled enough to go into my own small archives to find what I had collected and written in the past 60 years. My interview was slightly more charitable than what I wrote for the Radcliffe Quarterly for June 1981: “Radcliffe in the late 50’s and early 60’s was not the place to be taken seriously as a future scientist by faculty or colleagues. Academic achievement was encouraged – that is still the norm. But the underlying message really was that I should marry a scientist or doctor, not be one.” It continues to be a disappointment to me that no one at Radcliffe or Harvard has turned a lens on Radcliffe women to learn how they lived their lives and navigated second-wave feminism. I do miss the Radcliffe Quarterly!
